Wow, what a big plane Pigletté and BoBo's friends are flying in on. Are all Germans as big as their planes?

Runé and Alexander have come to visit Pigletté and BoBo. Runé is from Sweden, and Alexander is from Estonia.

They have come to see all the sights the Pacific Northwest has to offer—and, of course, to see the boys in their home environment.

The first stop is at Seattle
Center to see the Space Needle.
It was built for the 1962 World's Fair.

Next we are off on a monorail ride to downtown. Work has begun to expand the monorail from Ballard to West Seattle.

After the monorail, Runé takes Pigletté and BoBo on a streetcar ride. Runé is a fan of public transportation.

Next we are off on a ferry boat ride. Uncle Markie decides to catch up on his reading. Runé looks happy.

Alexander kills time by taking some portraits of himself.
Does Alexander look happy?
Uncle Markie thinks so.

Time to think about leaving for Oregon for a visit to Breitenbush Hot Springs, where Pigletté and BoBo first met.

Runé looks very comfortable in the hot springs. Are there hot springs close to your house?

Wow, look at the steam coming off Alexander!
He must be one hot guy.
But where are the boys?

Oh, no! A woodland yeti has gotten ahold of Pigletté and BoBo.
Whatever will they do to escape?

Luckily, the yeti just wants to tell the boys about the floor show that is coming up this evening in the main lodge.

And what a floor show it is! This gentleman is playing the hurdy gurdy — a very old instrument often played by Gypsies.

This gentleman is telling Javanese folk tales.
UncleMarkie gets a little scared
by the mask. Does it scare you?

What a large cast the show has!
Maybe Pigletté and BoBo should join them, like running away to the circus.

But all too soon, it is time for Pigletté and BoBo to put UncleMarkie to bed.
Hey! What's with the ears?

The next day, UncleMarkie and the visitors pack up and head for the Edgefield Winery (and distillery, and brew house).

Wow, what a big room they have.

Look at all those towels!

UncleMarkie reminds the boys not to take any home with them.

But the boys do find something to take home with them from the winery — several BIG bottles of wine for the cellar.

Alas, it is time for Pigletté and BoBo to return to Seattle.
Wow, this building is old. That's another word for "character."

As they drive into Seattle, Pigletté and BoBo spot the city they call home — at least until they move to Canada.
